Filippo Zuti Giachetti, Michael McIlwrath (MDisputes) · Tuesday, December 20th, 2022

According to arbitration historian Derek Roebuck, what practice was widely used during the reign of her majesty Queen Elizabeth I to avoid the involvement of the Crown in disputes?

1. “Arbitrage”, a practice in many ways similar to modern arbitration, and which had its roots in the Norman conquest.
2. “Dunking”, a means of encouraging litigants to settle their disputes while being lifted in and out of water, often a lake or stream.
3. “Loveday,” in which “love” was a form of resolution and “day” meant the beginning of the process.

This was one of the questions asked at the first ever live Kluwer Arbitration Blog Quiz. And if you are scratching your head for the answer, fear not, the Arbitration Station captured the event and all the answers.
